Florencia Aise: A Taste of Mendocino at Art Basel Week

Writing LA

A covered pavilion in one of the most important fairs during the week of Art Basel Miami Beach—it's a deliciously explosive cocktail that would intoxicate any artist in the world. And painter Florencia Mendoza Aise will get to taste it in a just few days.

After focusing on her career locally, this year the young artist decided to expand her reach internationally. That goal was quickly accelerated when she was selected to display her works at SPECTRUM Miami, one of the top art shows that comprise Miami's famous Art Week, otherwise known as Art Basel Week. SPECTRUM will be held December 3-7 in the Wynwood District.

Says Aise, "I'm thrilled to be a part of that movement. Because there will be a wide array of international exhibitors and I'll be in the heart of the contemporary art world. It's where any artist would like to be, and I think that will allow me to grow."

She also said that she hopes to live up to everyone's expectations because "Not everyone can be a part of this show. So it was a great joy when Eric Smith, the director of the show, told me that he liked my work and that I qualified to be showcased in Spectrum."

Regarding her works, the painter said that, at present, her latest collection of "hyperrealism" works includes Malbec grapes and The Hunger Games, a series inspired by the well-known movies.
